IN A CONSERVATION VISIONARY

“We have the opportunity today to protect land with conservation easements, but tomorrow it may be gone. It’s nearly impossible to roll back the impact of development. Hopefully, there will be a very long series of future generations who will live in, care for, and call the Flathead Valley home. I wanted to share this part of our wonderful planet, unblemished, with them.”

-David Sowerwine, Looking back on the decision

The story of Flathead Land Trust’s first conservation easement has roots in a conservation visionary, Owen Sowerwine. Most folks know the name Owen Sowerwine from its association with the Owen Sowerwine Natural Area. Few know Owen Sowerwine is connected to Flathead Land Trust’s first conservation easement. It took courage by the Sowerwine family to choose Flathead Land Trust in its infancy to hold their easement. Knowing the family’s background, it was only fitting that they chose Flathead Land Trust and had confidence in supporting such a new organization.

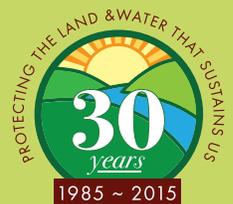

Owen Sowerwine had been a leader in conservation in the Flathead. He initiated the fight to preserve the 442-acre Owen Sowerwine Natural Area that was named after him. Owen was a pioneer who creatively helped this special place become the first and only natural area on school trust land. Owen’s commitment to the natural area made it a reality when he took on the responsibility of managing the land as chair of the “new” Park Board in the 1970s. Owen also helped protect yet another treasure in the Flathead—the north shore of Flathead Lake. He worked with landowners on the north shore to purchase easements from them and these easements later became the Flathead Lake Waterfowl Production Area. Owen passed away in 1975, just prior to the development of land trusts in Montana. The earliest land trust to work in Montana was the Nature Conservancy in 1976, followed by the Montana Land Reliance in 1978, and Flathead Land Trust in 1985.

OUR MISSION

Flathead Land Trust is dedicated to the conservation of northwest Montana's land and water legacy through voluntary agreements with private landowners.

CELEBRATING THREE DECADES OF PROTECTING THE LAND & WATER THAT SUSTAINS US

It's hard to believe that the Flathead Land Trust is celebrating its 30th year in 2015. A lot of impactful work has been accomplished over those thirty years by many incredible, community-minded folks who came together as a result of an idea and vision for what they believed the future should hold for the Flathead Valley. The seed of this idea has sprouted and flourished over the years, creating on-the-ground conservation projects that have protected our open lands, lakes, rivers, farms and forests – all the things vital to our natural heritage and fundamental to our sense of place as well as our community's prosperity.

A big part of celebrating a significant birthday is the opportunity to look back and gain perspective from the past. In 1988, the first executive director of the Flathead Land Trust, Jo Ann Speelman, penned a newspaper article explaining the factors that provided the catalyst for the formation of the Flathead Land Trust.

"In the late 1970s and early 1980s, booming economic conditions in the lush Flathead Valley induced indiscriminate development and hodgepodge planning that chopped up the area. These practices caused alarm among both individuals and groups such as the Flathead Conservation District, which wanted to preserve prime agricultural farmland.

At the same time, the three forks of the Flathead River were incorporated into the National Wild and Scenic River system, and the Flathead National Forest launched a project to obtain, in fee or through easements, a corridor along these rivers for the protection of the resource.

These two simultaneous events aroused an interest in conservation easements as a land protection tool for the Valley, especially for farmland where owners were wary of zoning, but wanted to do something to save agricultural lands.

Common interests eventually dovetailed efforts and the Trust for Public Land was contacted to consult with interested community members as to the options available. Once a core working group determined that a local land trust was the best viable option, a framework was established along with a board of directors and the Flathead Land Trust was born."

The Flathead Land Trust's first project, a cooperative effort with Trust for Public Land, was the purchase and transfer of a 460-acre farm near the north shore of Flathead Lake to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service which became the Blasdel Waterfowl Production Area. This protected land is a community treasure and includes the historic Blasdel Barn – one of the most photographed and iconic barns in the Valley.

Shortly thereafter, the Sowerwine family donated a conservation easement on their 157-acre farm on Fennon Slough in 1988. This became the first conservation easement held by Flathead Land Trust and is a wonderful story of a family's conservation vision put to action (see cover story).

I hope you'll join us this year at one of our 30th anniversary events, help celebrate Montana Open Land Month in July, and attend our biggest event of the year on September 26th at the Barn Bash – Celebrating 30 Years of Conservation with Flathead Land Trust.

Enjoy this issue of ViewPoints and know that you are a big part of what makes this legacy possible – celebrate with us!

NEW FACES ON THE BOARD

CHRISTINE OHLER

Chris is a native Montanan born in Kalispell. She spent 25 years in Alaska and came back home to the Valley in 2004. She works in the title insurance and settlement services industry and has been the vice president/county manager of Insured Titles in Kalispell since 2007. Chris brings knowledge of land title related issues and research to the board, as well as strong involvement in our community. She is an Alumni of Leadership Flathead and also serves on the board for the Kalispell Chamber of Commerce. Her free time is spent skiing, biking and hiking in our beautiful Valley. With her land title and business community experience, we are grateful to have Chris join our board of directors.

JON JORDAN

Jon was born and raised in Central Montana. His parents introduced him to the landscapes of Montana by traveling to and from sports and recreational events. Jon moved to the Flathead Valley after obtaining a BS degree from the University of Montana in Missoula, with a dual major in environmental studies and geography and specialization in GIS and cartography. Jon met his wife Lindsey in the Flathead Valley and they now have two young kids. Being outdoors appeals most to Jon and he shares that love of the outdoors with his wife, kids, family and friends. He currently works as a financial advisor for Edward Jones and brings his expertise and knowledge as a member of our finance committee. We are very fortunate to have Jon “on-board” and committed to our efforts.

We also want to give a big thank you to Alison Young, outgoing board President who served for 9 years as a board member, the last three as president, as well as interim Executive Director in 2013 and 2014. Her incredible energy, commitment to our mission, and leadership is inspirational and is to be commended. Even though she’s no longer on the board, we just couldn’t let her get away that easy. She is now chairing our fundraising event committee, helping to plan our Barn Bash – 30th Anniversary event on September 26th.

PINE GROVE POND FISHING AREA EXPANSION

Jaden Hazelton (age 11) and Mike Jousma with a big Rainbow at the Pine Grove Pond Celebration

Flathead Land Trust helped add over four acres to the popular Pine Grove Pond family fishing area in December. We initiated the project to enhance the community asset as well as protect shoreline of the Whitefish River and ensure the undeveloped land will remain as intact forested riparian habitat.

The Pine Grove Pond site was also recently added to and enhanced by other organizations that in total resulted in expanding the family fishing area to nearly twice its original size and improving the parking and access road. Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks and Flathead Land Trust hosted a celebration of the recent additions and enhancements on April 11. The celebration recognized Flathead Land Trust, Charles and Sarah Barrow, Carol Fontaine, and Whitefish Credit Union for their contributions to expand the site from 13 to 23 acres in size with land bordering a half mile of the Whitefish River. The event also showed appreciation to Robin Street, Flathead Electric, LHC Inc., Flathead Valley Community College, the City of Kalispell, and Walleye Unlimited for enlarging the parking area and resurfacing it and the access road with asphalt.

Over 70 people joined the celebration with hot dogs and lemonade provided by Flathead Land Trust and prizes given by Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks. It was a great day celebrating a community treasure for family recreation in the Flathead. And the fishing was great!

Courtesy of David Sowerwine

It was Owen's son, David, who suggested his family's land be put in a conservation easement thirteen years after his father's death. David had a strong connection to the family's 157 acres on Fennon Slough as he had spent a lot of time on the property while growing up. He did not want to see it subdivided. David had the vision to understand that his family's land, which provided open space, excellent fish and wildlife habitat, and helped maintain our excellent water quality, was a treasure for the community.

With that strong beginning rooted in a dedicated conservationist, Flathead Land Trust has gone on to protect over 10,500 acres of land and collaborate with like-minded conservation organizations and agencies to protect an additional 2,600 acres during its first 30 years. These projects have included safeguarding critical lands that help keep the Flathead River and Flathead Lake clean, conserving important fish and wildlife habitat, sustaining family farms, and maintaining our outstanding recreational opportunities in the Flathead. These are things that are easy to take for granted for those of us who live here but we must be reminded that none of it has happened by accident. Flathead Land Trust continues the legacy of the conservation visionary, Owen Sowerwine, continuing to protect our unparalleled land, water and special places that sustain us. Thank you for joining us in these efforts for the past 30 years, and more importantly, for the next 30.

GIVING A GIFT THAT LEAVES A LASTING LEGACY

"In 1988 when we discovered the Flathead Valley, it was love at first sight.

While there was a lot less development in the Flathead back then, we realized that the Flathead Land Trust was a forward thinking and important player in preserving the beauty and special character of this place. Milt got involved in the early '90s and served on the Flathead Land Trust board for 17 years. It was an education for us and a privilege to put our property into a conservation easement.

We consider living here a privilege, and as a part of that gift our response is to participate in maintaining the beauty and character of the Flathead for the future. As we look toward that legacy we had no trouble on agreeing to put the Flathead Land Trust in our will. We would encourage you to think about this way of being a steward of a very special place." --Milt and B.J. Carlson

EXCITING NEW UPDATES

Check out our new and improved website at flatheadlandtrust.org and stay up-to-date on our upcoming events, conservation projects, places we protect, and so much more. We are also very proud of our new brochure and case statement hot off the press. Contact us to get a copy.

This winter, we also released our first Stories From the Land video featuring the Johnston conservation easement and their inspirational family story of deep connection to the land. Watch it at www.flatheadlandtrust.org/places/index.html.

All was made possible by a generous grant from the Land Trust Alliance (www.landtrustalliance.org), giving important support to conserve the special places of northwest Montana.

HIGHLIGHTED BUSINESS SUPPORTERS

GLACIER BANK – Long Term Supporter

Glacier Bank has been a long-term supporter of Flathead Land Trust. They have been business members at the $500 corporate conservator level for over ten years. In addition, Dave McNutt, Vice President at Glacier Bank, has served on the Finance Committee for Flathead Land Trust for the past eight years. Dave has been a key resource and has consistently dedicated time to monthly finance committee meetings. He assists Flathead Land Trust at the drop of a hat whenever needed with a cheerful, helpful smile. We are fortunate for having such a great community supporter.

GLACIER GUIDES & MONTANA RAFT CO. – Event Supporter

A partner supporter for several years now, Glacier Guides & Montana Raft Co. are stepping up huge this year to sponsor our Flathead River Float Tour on August 29th by providing all of the boats, guides, and river gear for the day. In operation since 1983, the “Guides” provide ecological sensitive backcountry guiding and interpretation in Glacier National Park and rafting on the North Fork and Middle Fork of the Flathead River. They are a model community-invested business that gives back and helps to protect our spectacular land and water resources in northwest Montana. We are grateful for their generosity and partnership.

KALISPELL BREWING CO. – Highlighted Supporter

Kalispell Brewing Co. is one of our newest business partner supporters and will be hosting a Benefit Brews Night for Flathead Land Trust at their brewery tasting room on June 16th. Founded in 2012 by Cole Schneider and Maggie Doherty, this husband and wife duo are proud to produce handcrafted lagers and ales using quality ingredients, with an eye for detail in each and every step of the brewing process, and a passion for beer. Help us thank Kalispell Brewing Co. for their investment in our community and support for conservation of our vital open lands and clean water in the Flathead.
